

Mastering the Present Perfect Tense

Section 1

What does 'present perfect' mean?

Exploring the meaning of the present perfect tense

English learners often get confused when they hear the phrase 'present perfect'. After all, it does not seem to be a present tense. For instance:

I have been to China three times.

I have been to China three times and each time happened in the past. So why do we use a present tense for this? Why don't we just say, 'I went to China three times'?

The important thing to note is that the present perfect tense explains a connection between the present and the past. When we say we have been to China three times, our time reference is so far or until now. We don't actually use the phrases so far or until now, because the meaning is contained in the tense itself.

This may be difficult to grasp at first, especially if there are no 'perfect' tenses in your own language. Here are some examples of the present perfect tense, explaining how they form a link between the present and the past:

Example 1 Have you ever been on TV?

Ever means at anytime in your life until now.

Example 2 He has recently gotten divorced.

Recently signifies the near past – and therefore a link with the present.

Example 3 I have lost my keys.

We use present perfect if losing the keys in the past causes a problem now.

Example 4 We have lived here for three years.

We have lived here from three years ago until now.

Section2

Identifying the present perfect tense

Learning to recognize the present perfect tense

The present perfect tense is formed by using two verbs. The first verb is called the auxiliary verb. It is either HAVE or HAS, depending on the subject:

I have finished.
 She has finished.
 Joe has finished.
 My parents have finished.

We use HAVE with I, YOU, WE and THEY.

We use HAS with HE, SHE or IT (or the name of a singular person place or thing).

The second verb is what we call the 'past participle'. You will often see a chart where a verb is displayed in three forms, such as take/took/taken. The past participle is the third form. As we can see from the following table, the third form is sometimes the same as the second form and sometimes different. For a few verbs, all three forms are the same:

present	past	past participle
take	took	taken
write	wrote	written
steal	stole	stolen
walk	walked	walked
slip	slipped	slipped
teach	taught	taught
let	let	let

As we have learned, the present perfect tense is formed using two verbs, the auxiliary verb (have/has) and the past participle. Here are some examples:

She has taken...
 Harry has written...
 It has walked...
 The handle has slipped...
 Mrs. Bee has taught...
 He has let...

I have taken...
 They have written...
 You have walked...
 I have slipped...
 I have taught...
 My friends have let...

Section 4

Keywords

Recognizing and using present perfect tense keywords.

Another way to approach the present perfect tense is to look at keywords. There are a few keywords that we associate with the present perfect. Note: these words can be used with other tenses, too.

For

I have lived here for three years.

Since

I have lived here since 2005.

Already

Sean has already left.

Yet

He hasn't left yet.

Just

Sean has just left.

Ever

Have you ever been to Mexico?

Never

I have never been to Mexico.

Always

He has always been faithful to his wife.

Times

They have been to Mexico three times.

Recently

Have you been to Mexico recently?

Before

Have you been to Mexico before?

So far

So far, he has scored three goals this season.

Can you spot the keywords in these sentences?

They have recently moved to Arizona.
 Being from Saudi Arabia, he has never seen snow before.
 How many times has this happened to you?
 We haven't had a holiday for ages.
 Since Saturday, we have had rain every day.
 We have already painted that room.

Section 5

Negative and question forms

Constructing negative sentences and questions in the present perfect tense.

It is easy to form questions in the present perfect tense. We use HAVE/HAS followed by the subject and the past participle:

Have you seen Jack lately?

Has Jack finished reading his book?

To form a WH question, just add the WH word on to the beginning of the sentence:

Where have you been?

What have you done?

* We don't often use WHEN with the present perfect tense. Because WHEN indicates a specific time, we use the past tense.

Exercise 5

Constructing questions in the present perfect tense.

Change these sentences to questions using the prompts. Answers are on page 18.

Example: He has bought a pen. => What has he bought?

- | | |
|--|------------------------|
| 1 He has been to China. | Where _____? |
| 2 They have lived here for three years. | How long _____? |
| 3 Scott has taken your car. | Who _____? |
| 4 Vera has known about it for a long time. | How long _____? |
| 5 I have seen it three times. | How many times _____? |
| 6 We have chosen the red one. | Which one _____? |
| 7 She has lost five pounds. | How many pounds _____? |
| 8 She has been here since July. | How long _____? |
| 9 Joe has gone to Alabama. | Where _____? |
| 10 She has married Bill. | Who _____? |

To form a negative sentence using the present perfect tense, use not between HAVE/HAS and the past participle:

He has not eaten.

In speech, we can use the contracted form:

He hasn't eaten.

We can also use the word never to give a negative meaning to the sentence:

He has never eaten pigeon.

Exercise 6

Constructing negative sentences in the present perfect tense.

Change these sentences to negative sentences using the prompts. Answers are on page 18.

Example: He has returned. => He has not returned.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|--------|
| 1 He has been to China. | _____. |
| 2 They have sent the package. | _____. |
| 3 Scott has taken your car. | _____. |
| 4 Jacy has completed her project. | _____. |
| 5 I have ordered Chinese food. | _____. |
| 6 We have lost your records. | _____. |
| 7 She has lost a lot of weight. | _____. |
| 8 She has kept her promise. | _____. |
| 9 Joe has gone fishing. | _____. |
| 10 The cats have caught the mice. | _____. |

Change these sentences to negatives, using never:

- | | |
|------------------------------|--------|
| 1 He has been to China. | _____. |
| 2 I have seen a ghost. | _____. |
| 3 They have eaten sashimi. | _____. |
| 4 My son has seen a rainbow. | _____. |
| 5 We have discussed it. | _____. |

Section 6

When do we use the present perfect tense?

Gaining a complete understanding of when to use the tense

So far, we have understood that the present perfect forms a link between the present and the past. We have also seen that the present perfect tense is often used with certain keywords, such as ever, never, yet, for and since.

You may also have noted that we use the present perfect to show completion. Therefore, we often use it with words such as completed, finished or done:

He has completed the test.
Have you done it yet?

We often use the present perfect tense to give news or announcements, since this is a way of linking the present and the past:

The President has announced a new healthcare plan.
A tornado has destroyed part of a shopping mall in Oklahoma.

Remember that we use the present perfect tense to describe a non-specific time in the past. If we specify the time, we do not use the present perfect tense. We use the simple past tense:

Wrong: I have seen that movie last week.
Right: I saw that movie last week.

If the time is not specified, it can be possible to use either tense. In this case, the speaker gives the sentence a current emphasis by using the present perfect tense:

Right: I tried sushi, but I didn't like it.
Right: I've tried sushi, but I didn't like it.

Section 7

Exercise 7

Complete these sentences with either the present perfect tense or the past tense.

Section 8

Passive Voice

Using the passive voice with the present perfect

As with any tense, there is a passive form of the present perfect tense. Instead of doing the action, in the passive voice, the subject receives the action:

Active:	She hit her brother.	(she does the action)
Passive:	She was hit by her brother.	(she receives the action)

In the present perfect tense, we form the passive by using the present perfect form of the BE verb (has been/have been) followed by the past participle:

Zoe has been given another chance by her boss.
The people have been cheated out of their money.

Question form: Have the people been cheated out of their money?
Negative form: The people haven't been cheated out of their money.

FAQ

Frequently asked questions about the present perfect tense

- Q: I have heard that been or gone can both be used as the past participle of go. What is the difference?
- A: gone indicates that the speaker has not returned. 'Andy has gone fishing' means that he is still away. been indicates that the speaker has returned. 'Andy has been to Tokyo' means that he has already returned.
- Q: I am confused about when to use been.
- A: We can use been in four different ways. Firstly, as the past participle of go (see above). Secondly, as the past participle of the verb be – 'She has been ill'. Thirdly, we use it in passive constructions – 'He has been given a medal'. Finally, we use it in the present perfect continuous tense – 'She has been jogging'.
- Q: I have heard people using the present perfect tense with the word today. Shouldn't we use the present tense with the word today?
- A: 'Today' has a past (this morning), a present (now) and a future (later today). We can use the present perfect to mean 'so far, today': They have sold five cars today.
- Q: Does the present perfect tense indicate that the action is finished or ongoing?
- A: It depends on the context. If we say, 'I've lived here for three years', it means I am still living here. If we say, 'I have finished my essay', it means the action is complete. The same applies to the present perfect continuous tense.
- Q: I have heard people using the phrase 'have had'. Why use the same word twice?
- A: You can hear people saying have had, has had and had had (in the past perfect tense). It does not mean that they are using the same word twice. The first is an auxiliary verb, has no meaning, but it shows that you are using the present perfect tense. The second is the past participle of the verb have. Here are some examples:

I have had a shower. (I have taken a shower)

I have had a rough day.

Q: What is the difference between these sentences: 'I have seen it' and 'I had seen it'?

A: I have seen it is the present perfect tense. I had seen it is the past perfect tense. The past perfect tense has a very specific meaning – something that happened before or up to a certain point in the past. In comparison, the present perfect tense describes something that happened before or up to the present time. The past perfect tense is used much less than the present perfect tense.

Q: Is there a difference between the way that we use the present perfect tense in spoken English and in written English?

A: In spoken English, we tend to use contractions:

He has returned	=>	He's returned.
We have done it	=>	We've done it.

If you use the long form in spoken English, it is not incorrect, but it will not sound natural.

Q: What is the present perfect continuous tense? How is it different from the present perfect tense?

A: The present perfect continuous tense is sometimes called the present perfect progressive tense. Like present perfect, it uses HAVE/HAS as an auxiliary verb, but it is followed by BEEN plus the -ing form of the verb:

Present perfect:	He has climbed the tree.
Present perfect continuous:	He has been climbing the tree.

The present perfect continuous tense is very close in meaning to the present perfect tense. Often, both are correct to use. However, the present perfect emphasizes completion and the continuous form emphasizes the process. In other words, the continuous form focuses on the action itself:

He has climbed the tree.	(He was able to do it; he completed it.)
He has been climbing the tree.	(That's why he's dirty.)
